Plant Sector Property Identification Reforms Project
Trade and Market Access Branch
Department of Agriculture

Dear Sir/Madam

RE: Plant Property Identification Reforms

1. About Grain Trade Australia

Grain Trade Australia (GTA) is the focal point for the commercial grain industry within Australia. It facilitates trade and works to provide an efficient, equitable and open trading environment by providing leadership, advocacy and commercial services to the Australian grain value chain.

GTA members are responsible for over 95% of all grain storage and freight movements made each year in Australia. Over 95% of the grain contracts executed in Australia each year refer to GTA grain standards and/or trade rules.

GTA members are drawn from all sectors of the grain value chain from production to domestic end users and exporters. GTA members are involved in grain trading activities, grain storage, grain for human consumption and stock feed milling. A list of all GTA members is attached.

Within this context, on behalf of its members, GTA provides comment on the Plant Property Identification Reforms.

2. General Comments on the Project

GTA welcomes the opportunity to provide its views and input into the Reform project given there is a shared objective to ensure the Reform and its outcomes support and enhance existing industry systems and government regulatory controls that facilitate commercial and non-restrictive trade.

GTA understands the Reform project regards the stated purpose of property identification is:

- a) for tracing and controlling disease after it leaves the farm; and
- b) for locating and contacting property owners when an incursion occurs that may threaten the enterprise if those regulated quarantine pests are detected in the area.

GTA respectfully recommends the Reform project considers a variation to the stated purpose to:

- a) for tracing and assisting in controlling pest incursions after carriers (such as grain) leaves the farm; and
- b) for locating and contacting property owners when an incursion occurs that may threaten the enterprise if those regulated quarantine pests are detected in the area.

Australia enjoys an enviable position in the world agricultural trade as a result of its existing regulatory standards, industry systems and processes that have been jointly developed by industry and government over many decades. As discussed in prior submissions relating to traceability, this Reform is an adjunct to these existing systems, standards and processes.

In the grain industry management of product quality and food safety is a process of Quality Assurance (QA) where risks are analysed, and process controls are employed to minimise risks as much as practically possible. The Australian grain industry QA processes have a strong proactive focus on the assessment and discovery of any grain quality and quarantine pest issues throughout the grain supply chain prior to the product being consigned to the domestic or export customer.

Those elements of traceability enable the grain industry today to be responsive to issues that may arise. This provides the industry with the ability to assess the source of any out of specification grain, incursion or other quarantine pests either by industry or (more rarely) by customers. Whilst these processes are currently not fully automated, or systemic, industry has commenced a review of those systems and is implementing changes to systems for a more fully integrated data sharing arrangement amongst stakeholders along the supply chain. The level of traceability and data capture has to-date been considered commensurate with the risk given that grain is a hard seeded, non-perishable raw ingredient used to produce processed feed and foods.

As previously articulated, the grain industry currently does not believe that the case exists to change from the current 'trace-back' approach to 'live' tracking.

Given this industry view there is a concern that the imposition of a property identification approach to support traceability across the grain industry is impractical, may provide limited value and will create unnecessary cost to industry without commensurate benefit through a reduction in risk or exposure to incursion of quarantine pests.

3. Commensurate Risk

Given the biosecurity risk exposure for grain as compared to the animal industry and to some plant industries is markedly different it is important to justify why a large expenditure of government funds and industry energy is required for this lower risk area.

GTA supports a process of identifying the level of risk and implementing risk management practices that are commensurate with that risk level. This may include a modification to existing industry practices or systems to provide the same benefit.

Implementing a process as stated in Principle 1 purely for consistency across commodities and plant types is burdensome and needs to be justified. Further details on process steps and the underlying requirement to have property identifiers is needed before the benefit to the grain industry can be determined and therefore (possibly) supported by GTA and its members. Questions also arise on the gaps in information requested under the proposal, given that there are many other stakeholders within the supply chain such as transport operators.

4. Existing Systems & Processes

The grain industry has worked with governments at both the state and federal level over many years to refine and improve its capability to manage biosecurity risk. Both industry and government planning take into account the numerous aggregations of grain that occurs through the common user supply chain and have developed commensurate systems to trace any source of biosecurity concern.

Some key components of the system are records (including quality, source farm/paddock and reserved samples) captured on each delivery prior to storage and a national identification system for grain producers – the National Grower Register. Similarly, in Western Australia CBH and the WA DPIRD has collaborated to develop CBH member property records.

Consideration must be given to exploring and leveraging existing platforms such as NGR and the existing WA systems instead of creating and re-entering data into duplicate platforms. Exploring existing systems and processes, especially the potential for development of national systems may be valuable given the existing livestock PIC systems operate on eight separate databases and as GTA understands, require significant effort to complete and may not fully integrate with each other.

5. Reporting Requirements

The reasoning and value of providing information on the plant commodity types at every property is unclear. Questions remain on the frequency and method of provision of that information which will significantly impact on the costs for that data provision.

The material and documents available on the Department website indicate a mandated requirement for all parties in the supply chain to provide details on plant material at each property on a regular basis. However, there is insufficient detail as to:

- a) the level of detailed plant information required;
- b) whether plant material includes the vegetative state and seed;
- c) the format and process to provide this plant information;
- d) what process each of the states will follow to determine data requirements; and

- e) the purpose and value the material will create.

Based on the information provided, GTA is uncertain as to whether it is the Department's intention that every grain storage facility in Australia reports on a monthly basis what grain types are stored in each location. If so, we would question the value of this information on its own, but also relative to the cost of collection for biosecurity purposes. Additionally, potentially differing data requirements in each State will lead to confusion for an industry that operates in many locations across State borders. Open questions remain as to how the information will be stored and accessed.

Further information and engagement with industry is necessary to make any formal judgment on the value proposition for industry to undertake this proposed task.

6. Funding

The imposition of considerable cost to the grain industry for this proposed reform requires an understanding of how Government will fund this process. Already the grain industry is facing an increasing cost burden for Department activities under the current Cost Recovery programs, and we note current proposals for further increases in Export Cost Recovery programs.

Further information needs to be disclosed and presented as to the Government's intentions to cost recover the Department's additional expenditure or to utilise existing funds or develop cost recovery arrangements. Either method will impact the grain industry through added costs, and therefore clear benefits need to be apparent.

The movement of any funds away from proactive government and industry activities planned or currently underway towards establishing property identification numbers (and recording of plant materials at these properties) should be justified. Industry preference would be to make more funding available to increase surveillance throughout the supply chain to provide early identification of an incursion or to capture data to support pest area freedom.

GTA strongly believes it is better to fund activities that prevent incursion rather than allocating funds to develop a system to assist once an incursion has occurred.

GTA requests greater visibility and further information on the objectives and the value propositions of the proposed reform to be able to evaluate a proper assessment of the worthiness of the proposed arrangements.

Thank you for your consideration of this response.

Pat O'Shannassy
Chief Executive Officer
